

FOR REGISTERED INVESTMENT ADVISERS

Most of your client's wealth is somewhere you can't see.

You advise brilliantly on the accounts you custody. The house, the rental, the operating company, the trust, the policy, the vendors, the renewals — that lives in a filing cabinet and in your client's memory. TitanOS puts it on your record, under your brand, and turns it into a service you can charge for.

Advise on the whole balance sheet

Properties with their lenders, taxes, insurers and vendors. Accounts with balance history. Entities, valuables, obligations. You stop advising on a slice of the client's wealth and start advising on the picture.

Turn your centres of influence into a channel

The client's CPA and estate attorney get their own portal into the household you share. You become the hub of the professional network around that family instead of one spoke in it — which is the most natural referral mechanic there is.

Harder to leave than a performance number

When you hold the document vault, the renewal calendar and the vendor register, moving firms means rebuilding a household's operating life. Retention stops depending on what last quarter looked like.

A record that outlives the advisor

When a household moves to another advisor inside your firm, or a generation takes over, nothing important is left living in one person's head. Continuity becomes a property of the firm rather than of whoever happened to hold the relationship.

Revenue the market cannot compress

A flat fee per household, unrelated to assets under management. It grows with the number of families you serve rather than with the index, and it does not reprice itself when the market falls twenty percent.

More households per advisor

The platform assembles the report, tracks the renewal, chases the vendor and runs the premium call. That administrative load is the reason an advisor carries eight genuinely complex families instead of twenty-five.

Evidence of what you actually did

Every household gets an activity report: what was handled, when, and by whom. It earns its keep in the annual review, in the fee conversation, and in front of an examiner.

Your brand throughout, not ours

Your palette, logo, sending domain and client-facing reports, on your own database and your own deployment. Your clients never encounter the word TitanOS, on screen or in an email.

ON ONE RECORD

Properties and their lenders, taxes, insurers and vendors · Accounts and balance history · Cash flow and projections · A document vault that tracks expiry · Valuables · Entities · Obligations and renewals · Tasks and notes · Client portal · Partner portal · An assistant that answers only from this household's own record

WHERE THE CONVERSATION USUALLY STARTS

Ask a client with a rental what they pay their property manager. The standard is 8–12% of gross rent, and 15–20% once tenant placement and maintenance mark-ups are counted. On $300,000 of rent that is $30,000 to $60,000 a year — to someone who does not report to them, does not talk to you, and is not looking at the rest of their balance sheet.

See it on a real household, with real documents, in twenty minutes.
